DIPHTHERIA.*West Virginia—Martinsburg.

With reference to the epidemic of diphtheria at Martinsburg, noted in last week's Public Health Reports, Surg. Carroll Fox reports that the first case developed in Martinsburg on August 21, and was traced to a source outside the city. During the next week two new cases developed; in the following seven days one case. During the fourth week one case. Then the public schools opened, and the increase in the number of cases was at first gradual and then more rapid. The schools were closed October 25, and the number of cases occurring has declined steadily. By November 19 the disease had practically disappeared, there having been but one reported case during the preceding seven days. From August 21 to November 19 there were in all 120 reported cases, with two deaths.
